A few days ago he started training with the new incoming Santos Laguna team. A versatile player capable of playing as wing, fullback or centre, on either wing or in the centres he is definitely a player to watch in this season. Voted "Best Young Player" by prestigious publications like Top 10 European Players Under 25, Gomez is a sure starter for the new Santos Laguna in the Mexican Apertura Tournament. His agent, Frank Wijngaard, told me the "one factor" that makes him become the player he is, is the skill level of the Barcelona Academy and above all, the influence of his coach, Carles Planchart. Gomez and Planchart formed a great relationship during the two seasons Gomez spent in Barcelona. Lose to Iniesta and Messi Before arriving at the Blaugrana, Gomez played on a Spanish second division side. He arrived to Barca from the youth team of FC Pachuca and began to receive the love of the fans. In his debut season, he was in the Barca starting XI and scored six goals. At the end of the season, however, he began to get the attention of certain clubs abroad. An offer from Napoli was received, but Gomez wasn't interested. Instead, he opted to play in England for two seasons with Queens Park Rangers. It is a well-known fact that during those two years, Gomez's game suffered quite a bit and he did not stand out in the eyes of a manager like Mark Hughes. His final season, however, he became one of the most impressive young players in the Championship. Gomez played regularly, with 26 games and 8 goals. Mouyad's call When the time came for an inevitable decision, Gomez was still a second division player, and because of this, his agent, Frank Wijngaard, decided that
