Now I want to sort all the images in old/ to a different folder called 'backup' and all the images in new/ to a different folder called 'archive'. I know I can get all the images in a specific directory using PHP, but how can I do this for the specific directories? Is there any add-on or other app to do this on Ubuntu? A: Try this: `find images -type f -print0 | xargs -0 mv`

`{ } { }.old` This uses the `-print0` option of `find`, which allows you to have a list of filenames embedded in a list of files passed to `xargs`. `xargs` takes the data from the standard input - in this case, the list of found files - and uses it to construct the `mv` command, replacing `{ }` with each filename. The final `{ }` are replaced by the directory we are in. You might want to use `-t ext` to get only images, or use `-iname` to name the images in a specific way. If you have more than two directories, you can use `find` to list them - it will be slower though as it does list them (each directory will be listed twice). So the following will work: `find. -type f -print0 | xargs -0 mv { } { }.old` And the `-type f` will only include files in the directories you're looking in (e.g., no directories or symbolic links). — The Associated Press Posted: 08/15/2014 05:52:13 AM EDT Click photo to enlarge FILE - In this Aug. 1, 2014 file photo, David A.
