* The Adobe Photoshop tutorial has fairly thorough step-by-step instructions on just about any action you can take with the program. You can find it at `www.tutorialsplanet.com/tutorials/photoshop/photoshop_tutorials` or search for "photoshop tutorial." * _Photoshop Essentials for Beginners_ by Susan Fitzpatrick and Sarah Saba (Sybex) gives a good introduction and roadmap for beginners. It's organized by tasks — layer styles, file management, and so on — and includes a complete index. Look for the book's review here (`www.tutorialsplanet.com/reviews/photoshop-essentials-for-beginners`). * _Photoshop CS5: The Missing Manual_ by Scott Kelby (O'Reilly) is the definitive guide to using the latest version of Photoshop. It shows how to set up and manage files and packages, and includes guides for professional users and budding photographers who want to get the most out of their CS5 images. You can find the book's review here (`www.tutorialsplanet.com/reviews/photoshop-cs5-missing-manual`). You can download the exercise files for the book (`www.dummies.com/go/getphotoshoptea`) for all the tips, tricks, and demonstrations that may be useful for you. ## Setting Up Your Setup Here are the tools and software you need to get started. * A monitor: A screen or laptop monitor is your best bet for getting your work done. See the "Avoiding Backups" sidebar for advice about getting your monitor ready to use. * A keyboard and mouse: You can navigate your program by typing commands into the keyboard and clicking with your mouse. I recommend a relatively large mouse (or a trackball) for precise pointing. * Your computer: To get Photoshop set up, use the steps in Chapter 2 to install Photoshop on your computer. ## Finding the Camera You need to know how to connect a camera to your computer. After that, Photoshop keeps track of the camera's settings and automatically updates when you connect the camera again. Q: What is the alternative to ShowWindow() that works in MFC? ShowWindow() is MFC only, then what is the alternative to it? A: There is no API for this in MFC, it has been removed in Win9x. See this MSDN page for more info. The API you probably want is SetWindowLong() and GetWindowLong(), with the values of GWL_STYLE and GWL_EXSTYLE to change the window properties. Q: How can I determine if a model is an XNA view model? I'm iterating through all the XNA classes (while excluding ones specific to the XNA Game Studio IDE) in a project and am looking for a way to tell if a model class is an "XNA view model". I looked at the XNA Game Studio 3.0 model viewer and all the model classes have the "Implements" marker on them. So my solution seems to be to just look for the "View" and "Controller" markers on model classes. A: The easiest way to find view models in a visual studio solution is to open the context menu of a non-view model in the designer and choose the command "Generate View." You'll get a dialog with a list of all view models. My best friend walked out on me... One day on Facebook I saw him post about a friend of his, I presume she is a friend and because she doesn't have a FB I couldn't check or message him about what she did and if she did it because she was insecure. I ended up trying to put the friend request into the account, but because he didn't have an FB account we ended up not connecting. My best friend was a person I had known since childhood, we went through school together, college together, had jobs together, played sports together, went to church together, basically were best friends, we always did everything together and he really was one of the best friends I've ever had. Although we were still young we broke up a few years ago. Since then, because of my depression, I got in contact with him again, we talked, and were still friends. But lately he's been kind of distant. I wanted to reconnect with him but in a different way. I tried to send him a message but I got no reply. The [Radiologic diagnosis and therapy of cystic changes and pancreatic tumors in the first 2 years of life]. The aim of this study was to review the trends in ultrasound (US) imaging and endoscopic retrograde cholangiopancreatography (ERCP) in children with cystic changes and pancreatic tumors, and to evaluate the role of both techniques. US-guided biopsy was diagnostic in 25% and US-guided fine-needle aspiration (FNA) was diagnostic in 91% of cysts >3 cm. After subsequent ERCP, 39% of patients with cysts >3 cm and 100% of patients with a cystic component in the pancreas had a definitive diagnosis.
