in the field of branding. This course introduces the construction and application of various brand strategies and usage cases. Students learn to construct a clear brand strategy and apply the strategy by working through a variety of brand usage cases. Students will develop the skills and knowledge needed to analyze how brands, product design and packaging communicate their specific brand messages and to compare brands' unique characteristics to determine the style they promote. Students are introduced to brand management, business practices, marketing strategies and development of brands for internal and external use. What is the mission of the course? Sustainable commerce requires that we practice the following strategies: We need to design products that will protect the environment for the benefit of our consumers. We need to develop business models that do not commoditize our products. We need to redesign the marketing strategies that we use to sell products to best serve our consumers. If we are to meet this goal, we have to embrace these strategies more fully than we have. By taking this course, you will be trained to analyze and construct brands, brand strategies and brand messages. Brand Strategy To understand sustainable commerce, we must first study the basic elements of branding. This course presents a client-based analysis of brand strategy to enable students to construct a clear brand strategy and apply the strategy by working through a variety of brand usage cases
